

Nemours Children's Health Partners with Blessings in a Backpack to Address Food Insecurity in Local Schools

Participating students will take home food over the weekends throughout the school year

Orlando, Fla. (January 13, 2023) – During the recent celebration of its 10th year since opening doors in Orlando, Nemours Children's Hospital, Florida announced that it has enhanced its partnership with Blessings in a Backpack, a local nonprofit organization committed to reducing the food gap for school-aged children in Central Florida.

The partnership between Nemours Children's Hospital, Florida and Blessings in a Backpack will ensure students enrolled in the free-lunch program will have nutritious foods on the weekends and during holiday breaks. Nemours Children's has committed to providing food to eligible students at Boggy Creek Elementary in Osceola County, Winegard Elementary in Orange County and Laver Elementary in Seminole County through the end of the school year.

Volunteers from Nemours spent the morning at Boggy Creek Elementary packing up food for children to take home during the long Martin Luther King Jr. holiday weekend.

This initiative is one example of how Nemours Children's Health goes "Well Beyond Medicine" and expanding initiatives outside the hospital walls to improve health and address disparities in the communities Nemours serves.

"Nemours Children's Health is proud to expand our partnership with Blessings in a Backpack to be able to address a critical need for students in our area," said Martha McGill, Senior Vice President and Chief Administrative Officer, Nemours Children's Hospital, Florida. "Food insecurity is one of the most important factors that can impact a child's health. We hope by expanding our partnership with Blessings in a Backpack that more children will have better opportunities to enhance their health."

There are 9 million children experiencing food insecurity in the United States, according to Blessings in a Backpack, or one in eight children struggling with access to food. Between Orange, Osceola and Seminole County alone, approximately about 72 percent of students are part of the free and reduced-price meal program at school.

Since its start, Blessings in a Backpack has provided 23.5 million hunger-free weekends to more than 838,600 children nationwide.

"It's estimated that one in every five children in Central Florida leaves school on a Friday afternoon and doesn't have food again until they return to school on Monday morning, so we fill that 65-hour weekend meal gap to make sure that kids have the nutrition that they need so that they can show up to school Monday morning nourished and ready to learn," said Sarah Carlson, Managing Director, Blessings in a Backpack.

"As educators, we know very well that kids cannot learn if their tummies are not full," said Yara Tavaréz de la Fuentes, principal, Boggy Creek Elementary. "They're not going to be in the mind space to be able to pay attention to fractions and literature, so it's important to me that once we take care of those logistical things, we can get to work."
